Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Saturday 13 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Bitterly cold today, some snow and ice in west. Windy.

Today:
Many central and eastern areas starting fine and frosty and staying very cold with brisk, bitter southeasterly winds and thickening cloud. Snow affecting Northern Ireland giving a few centimetres, while patchy snow and freezing rain affects some other western areas.

Tonight:
Patchy rain, sleet and snow continuing in western areas, with a continued risk of ice in places. Mostly dry further east with another quite sharp frost.

Sunday:
Rain becoming more widespread and heavier. Continuing risk of freezing rain, snow and icy conditions across northern areas. Somewhat less cold for most, noticeably milder in the far west.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Turning much milder from Monday. All areas will see showers or longer spells of rain at times but also some drier interludes. Windy at times especially in northwestern areas.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.